

SCOP SHEET

Est. 1980. Stuart Levitan, prop. ©

today
in the news

Feb. Sixteenth

Nobody Here

The ultimate presidential candidate descends on Madison Monday when Nobody holds a campaign rally at 1 pm on the State Street Mall. "Nobody has all the answers," notes noted psychedelic patriarch Wavy Gravy, who will accompany the universally beloved candidate on his/her/its triumphant appearance. The Nobody for President campaign, proclaiming "US out of North America," kicked off in San Francisco last week, and is slated to stun the stolid voters of New Hampshire just in time for the first primary of 1980.

The "Nobody for President" campaign receives a gala sendoff in San Francisco, much to the chagrin of airline passengers. Page A-4.

Nobody enters race

The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Spirits were high Tuesday as Nobody — the presidential candidate who always keeps his promises — hit the campaign trail.

In a gala sendoff featuring a two-piece band, Wavy Gravy, who considers himself Nobody's fool, and campaign manager Curtis Spangler carried the candidate onto an airliner bound for New Hampshire, site of the next major presidential primary.

"Nobody is still perfect," said Gravy, who like Spangler was dressed for the occasion in a clown suit.

"Who will lower your taxes? Nobody!"

shouted Gravy.

"Who will help the poor? Nobody!"

"Who knows the truth about Chappaquiddick? Nobody!"

Bemused, confused and suspicious fellow passengers stood by waiting for Nobody, then cheered lustily as a set of plastic chattering teeth was paraded around the departure lounge on a velvet cushion.

With the band playing "Nobody Knows the Trouble I've Seen," Nobody made two additional appearances for television cameras, but he was listless the third time out after being wound up to start with.