

this time. We're trying to get people registered and I think they ought to just consider the concept of anarchy and then maybe vote for whoever looks like he can beat Reagan. This is what I got sucked into in the first place. I'm just scared of getting vaporized.

H: Do you think what happened LBJ might be repeated?

W: Sure, sure. Whenever you get stuck with the lesser of two evils it's a problem. That's why we strive so hard to get none-of-the-above on the ballots.

H: Who's Nobody's running mate?

W: Anybody for Vice . . . If you look at the issues you'll see that Nobody has brought the marines home from Beirut; Nobody has eliminated the deficit. In fact, Nobody understands the economy. I don't think many people would argue with that.

H: Do you think Nobody can beat the arm's race?

W: I think Nobody's done it. Right now, nobody is working for you in Washington. But we need to make it official.

H: When you come to Dartmouth, what are your plans?

W: We have these plastic teeth that we use for political speeches. I'll walk the teeth around, kiss a few babies with them, let people meet the candidate, whatever comes to mind. And if nobody shows up, that's okay too.

H: What kind of work do you do when you're not campaigning?

W: I performed in Washington this summer for this thing called "We Still Have a Dream" with Stevie Wonder and everybody. I go to jail a lot with Jackson Brown at the Diablo Canyon. I've been getting arrested as a mutant bunny. I have a human foot on a chain for luck. "Mutant Bunnies for Peace"; it's my greatest shot yet. The police don't want to be photographed arresting a giant bunny.

H: What about SEVA Foundation?

W: That's my main slice. I'm on the board of directors of SEVA, which is the Sanskrit word for service.

We do a lot of health instruction for The Woman of All Red Nations. When I was doing a show in LA the John Birch Society called me up and wanted to know about them. I had to appear before the Department of Licensing and Bingo to explain. They thought it was ladies from Russia, Bulgaria, Cuba — they really believed that.

H: When you come to New England, will you only be campaigning?

W: For the most part; I'll be on various campuses. I'm pleased that I will be at Dartmouth. I've always admired the snow sculpture. If somebody could make a snow sculpture of Nobody, I would give a prize for the best one.
